Two decades ago, Dove made a stand in challenging false beauty standards. Today, as we transition into an era where 90% of content is predicted to be AI-generated by 2025, our message still stands: keep beauty real.

Our new campaign, The Code, looks at the impact of AI on beauty, while celebrating the lasting legacy Dove has built.

We always feature real women as they truly are

We value the real beauty of all women and our content will keep beauty real: free of digital and AI distortion, and unrealistic beauty standards of any kind.

Almost half (46%) of Aussie women feel pressure to alter their appearance because of what they see online, even when they know the images are fake or AI-generated*. The rise of AI poses one of the greatest threats to real beauty in the last 20 years, meaning representation is more important than ever.

That's why Dove is renewing its vow to champion real beauty, with a commitment to never use AI to create or distort women's images.

At Dove, we believe no young person should be held back from reaching their full potential. However, low body confidence and anxieties over appearance stop young people being their best selves, affecting their health, friendships and even performance at school.
